SUBJECT: Commercial Driver's License (CDL) Requirements

This memo is to clarify that the only Commercial Driver's License (CDL) required for Motor Vehicle Service (MVS) positions is an intrastate CDL.

The Postal Service generally follows the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations (FMCSR) on Commercial Driver's Licenses (CDLs). While those regulations normally require drivers who engage in interstate commerce to possess an interstate CDL, Postal Service employees, such as MVS drivers, are exempt from that requirement while in the performance of their duties.

However, our drivers who would otherwise be required to possess an interstate CDL, are required to self-certify to their state that they operate or expect to operate in "excepted interstate commerce" in accordance with 49 CFR part 383.71(b)(1)(ii). Each state has its own procedure for completing the self-certification process, so applicants/employees with an intrastate CDL should be directed to their local Department of Motor Vehicles or their state's equivalent for appropriate guidance. Additionally, these individuals are still bound by their state's medical requirements regarding intrastate CDL licensing.

Applicants who only possess an intrastate CDL may apply for and be appointed to MVS positions, with the understanding that, upon appointment, they must follow the procedures outlined above.
